Kuvimbanashe Edwin Chikukwa is a 4th year Political Science major enrolled in the political science honors program. He was an Undergraduate Research and Creative Activities Slam finalist and will be graduating with honors from the College of Letters and Science.
Professor Bruhn’s research interests include democratization, political parties, and social mobilization. She is currently working on a major research project analyzing the impact of political party institutionalization on levels of protest and protest policing in four Latin American countries governed by the Left (Bolivia, Brazil, Chile and Venezuela). Her most recent book, Urban Protest in Mexico and Brazil (Cambridge University Press, 2008), discusses the implications of Left party victories for protest strategies. She is also the author of Taking on Goliath (1997), about party system change and the foundation of the main political party of the Left in Mexico. She has published extensively on Mexican elections, campaigns, the effects of party primaries, and the Mexican Left.
